

Black Community and Agency: Fighting the Color Line (1877-1940)

Description

Participants in this wholly online course will:

- Examine black communities of resistance – legal, intellectual, educational, social – to Jim Crow and the other forms of oppression during a bleak period in race relations in America.
- Delve into the stories of successful models of empowerment such as Greenwood in Tulsa, Oklahoma, black media, black-led educational institutions, and diverse forms of artistic expression.
- Frame narratives that see people of color with agency and in roles of leadership and heroism in the face of continual, often brutal repression.
- Employ a rich mix of primary and secondary sources to support student inquiry.

Audience and Grade Level

Teachers; Grades 6 - 12

Credits

67.5 PDPs or 3 graduate credits will be awarded to participants upon completion of this training. Graduate credit is available through Westfield State University at an additional cost of $325. Payment for graduate credit must occur prior to July 12, 2017. Registration form will be sent prior to course start.

Date and Location

This is an online course. It will run from July 5 through August 5, 2017.

Cost and Registration

Thanks to a grant from the Library of Congress Teaching with Primary Sources Program at CES, the cost of the workshop is $65 for member districts, and $72.50 for non-member districts.

Registration deadline: June 21, 2017